Marsh, and

J. H. Phillips were appointed a committee to nominate the remaining officers of the Convention, who reported the following: Rev. W. M. Young, of Wilmington, 1st

I acknowledge the claims of the such extensive boating operations toward the poor people of Columbia, the very fountain of States' Rights principles, the head and front of secession. "Let the dead bury their dead," is the literal quotation-let the dead honor the dead by attentions to the graves of the dead, of a dead but holy cause, might be better. But while we sympathise and give charity to those who suffered in the march of the ruthless Sherman, those who were robbed by those lamblike followers of General Wheeler in this City ought not to be forgotten. Then there is the heroic and deserving people of Richmond, Va., whose property was destroyed by the high-toned, chivalric Breckinridge and Early, christian, God fearing Confederate leaders whom a stern sense of duty compelled to destroy two dollars worth of property for every one the ruthless Sherman destroyed.

Then there is the Yankee settlement and town of Chambersburg, where churches were burned. As our friend, the editor of the Progress says, "assist in re-creeting the temples of God."

Andrew Johnson's Services in Ten-NESSEE.-The National Intelligencer of Saturday publishes the following letter from the Secretary of War to Andrew Johnson, reciting, in pointed and vigorous terms, the nature of his perilous and important military service during the war: WAR DEPARTMENT,

Washington City, March 3, 1865. His Excellency Andrew Johnson, Vice Presi dent elect : SIR :-- This Department has accepted your resignation as brigadier general and Military

Governor of Tennessee. Permit me, on this occasion, to render to you the thanks of this Department for your patriotic and able services during the eventful period through which you have exercised the high trust committed to your charge. In one of the darkest hours of the great struggle for national existence against rebellious foes, the government called you from the Senate, and from the comparatively safe and easy duties of civil life, to place you in front of the enemy, and in a position of personal toil and danger perhaps more hazardous than was encountered by any other citizen or military officer of the United States, With patriotic promptness you assumed the post, and maintained it under circumstances of unparalleled trials, until recent events have brought safety and deliverance to your State, and to the integrity of the constitutional

Union for which you so long and so gallantly perilled all that is dear to man on earth. That you may be spared to enjoy the new honors and perform the high duties to which you have been called by the people of the United States, is the sincere wish of one who, in every official and personal relation, has found you worthy of the confidence of the
